ABOUT THE JUROR – ALIX BAILEY

Alix Bailey is a figurative painter who has lived and worked in New York City for 25 years. Her work has been exhibited in New York City, around the country, and in Italy, where she spends part of the year. She studied painting at Bennington College with Pat Adams and Sidney Tillim and received her MFA from Indiana University.

Bailey paints directly from observation but moves beyond conventional portraiture. She describes her process as beginning with the human subject, drawn by love, light, or form, but evolving into something "not easily expressed verbally," a transformation from literal fact to a more abstract or poetic presence. Her paintings have received notable reviews, including those by John Yau in Hyperallergic, Karen Wilkin in The Hudson Review, and Jonathan Goodman in Tussle.
