Originally from Minneapolis, Lianne Smith made her move east in the late 80s after a solo gig opening for the Mekons in New York City. She immediately became involved in the East Village rock scene and was a pioneer in Williamsburg Brooklyn's artistic community where she hosted monthly hootenannies. She has been a regular member of the songwriting collective The Bushwick Book Club since 2019. Of her songwriting she says, "I write songs about standing in the middle of the road and wondering which way to go, about how others cheat us and how we cheat ourselves, about free-wheeling, bicycle riding, look-ma-no-hands exhilarations, and how it feels to say goodbye to summer.
